THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF.
No. VIII.

"Proofs of the corruption of gen James Wilkinson and of his connection with Aaron Burr," &c.

After having successfully fulfilled the mission on which he had been sent, having delivered his cargo of dollars and received his returns in treasonable projects, Mr. Powers came back to Natchez from whence he rendered the account of his mission by the letter (No. 36) dated 9th May, 1797, and received an answer of which we have the original (No. 37, 28th May, same year) which shews the exactness of all Mr. Power's details. The 640 dollars are not forgotten in this correspondence, and an account is rendered of the merchandize in which the dollars were concealed. In the Baron's answer, a new mission is spoken of, for which Power is directed to prepare. The instructions for this embassy are contained in a letter from the Baron, of which the original is ready to be produced (No. 38, May 1797.)

The se instructions of the preceding papers.—written with more Wilkinson had just attained the command in chief; the governor, who knew his character, was not so certain of his co-operation as when he was subordinate in command; he was the more doubtful, because Wilkinson had shewn a disposition to disavow his former connection by marching a body of troops to take possession of the posts. "No person, (the governor says to Power) shall be informed of your business, not even the intendant; Don Andress (the secretary) will be the only person in the secret. He then states he dispositions of the army of the United States, under the command of Wilkinson, are making to get possession of the ports pursuant to the treaty; and instructs his agent in the pretences which he is to urge to retard its fulfilment and stop the march of the troops. For this purpose Mr. Power is furnished with an official letter directed to the commander of the American army. (No. 39.) This he tells us is the ostensible purport of his mission. The second object which he warns him "no one ought to discover, and which for this reason he ought to retain in his memory, is to sound and examine the disposition of the people of the western country, the militia of which it is said had received orders to march;" in which case he is directed to give information to the commandant of New Madrid. He then gives him a kind of cypher, in which he is to communicate the most material facts on this point. After some artful instructions as to the language he is to hold to the people of Kentucky, the Baron comes at once to the point and says, "if a hundred thousand dollars distributed in Kentucky would be sufficient to raise an insurrection, I am sure the minister would sacrifice them with pleasure, and you may promise them, without much risk, to those who enjoy the confidence of the people: with a like sum for the army in case of necessity, and twenty pieces of cannon." On the subject of Wilkinson he says, "you will endeavor to discover with your natural penetration the disposition of the general. I doubt very much whether a person of his disposition can thro' vanity prefer the advantage of commanding the army of the Atlantic states, to that of being the founder, the deliverer—in fine, the Washington of the Western country;—his part is as brilliant as it is easy to perform. All eyes are fixed upon him—he possesses the confidence of his fellow-citizens and of the volunteers of Kentucky; on the slightest movement the people will name him general of the new republic; his reputation will form an army, and Spain as well as France will furnish him the means of paying it. Let him seize Fort Massac, and we will immediately send him arms and artillery, and Spain, confining itself to the possession of the ports of Natchez and the Walnut-hills, until the confederation takes place, will yield to the states of the west all the eastern shore to the Ohio, which will make an extensive and powerful republic, united by its interest and by its situation with Spain, who in concert with it will force the savages to take a part with it, and to mix in time with its citizens.—The people are discontented with the new taxes—Spain and France are disgusted by the connections of the United States with England. The army is weak and devoted to Wilkinson.

"The threats of congress justify me at once and without any disguise, to succor the western states; money will not be wanting, for I will immediately send a frigate to La Vera Cruz to fetch it as well as ammunition. One instant of firmness and resolution is all that is necessary to make the people of the west perfectly happy. If this instant is suffered to escape, and we should be forced to give up the ports, Kentucky and Tennessee, surrounded by the said posts and without communication with Louisiana, will remain forever under the oppression of the Atlantic states. If you represent these arguments with force to Wilkinson Sebastion, La Cassagne, &c. if you spread their notions among the people by gaining the best writers, such as Breckenridge and others by promises which shall be faithfully fulfiled, you may cause the most glorious and happy commotion; you will cover yourself with glory and may expect the most brilliant fortune," &c. If this were our only document it would be a most persuasive evidence of a previous intelligence between the baron and gen. Wilkinson. He had been his pensioner while second in command. Having attained the first rank he was now placed in a situation by the approaching rupture between the two nations, to elect between open rebellion and a return to duty. The Spaniards seems to have somewhat apprehended the latter, but to have calculated from his knowledge of the general's character, that he might be brought openly to throw off his allegiance. He therefore directs Power to flatter his vanity with the prospect of being the founder of a new republic. His avarice had been successfully tried before, and now hundreds of thousands of dollars figure in every line, money is not to be wanting, and his two ruling passions are to be excited to the utmost pitch. What can express the insolent certainty they had of the commander's treachery more fully, than that when enumerating the reasons why they counted upon success, such as that the people were discontented with their taxes, that France and Spain were disgusted with the government, and that the army was weak, the baron adds, that it was devoted to Wilkinson? This is the first time that the devotion of an army to its chief was placed in the list of reasons which were to ensure the success of its enemies; and the expression can only be accounted for, by supposing that the general was as much devoted to the enemy as the army were to him. Again, observe the distinction that is made between those whom it was expedient still to tempt. "GAIN (says the baron) Breckenridge and other writers who have influence by promises which shall be faithfully fulfilled"—"represent these arguments with force to Wilkinson, La Cassagne and Sebastian, and you will produce the most glorious commotion." Promises were necessary to Breckenridge, because he had not yet been bribed: Nothing was necessary but exhortation to induce Wilkinson and Sebastian—promises were not necessary to them, because they had not only been made, but recognised, and they only wanted a little encouragement to appear what they really were. Sebastian has been convicted and degraded by his country, for having been at the time this letter was written, in the pay of Spain. Does not the association of Wilkinson's name with his, in this confidential letter of instructions prove an equality of guilt?

The Baron de Carondelet did not however know the character of the general. He was willing to take all the money that could be offered, he was willing to carry on any correspondence, provided it could be kept secret, and while in a subordinate station he was willing to risk a place for which he knew he could obtain an indemnity; but the scene was now changed, he was at the head of the army, his legal emoluments were great and his rapacity foresaw the means of increasing them. His secret correspondence had been suspected. The frequent visits of Power had occasioned jealousy—and the indiscreet communications of the Spanish officers, as we learn from himself, had excited more than attention to his conduct. He was not yet prepared openly to assume the Spanish uniform, and a secret correspondence had become dangerous. Power, therefore did, not fully succeed in the object of his mission. He however undertook it and his answer to the Baron's letter, (No. 40,) which is dated at Natchez, 4th June, 1797, contains among other matter highly useful on this occasion, the following precious extract: "I will tell W. that the difficulty and danger of carrying money by land, have prevented you from sending the 640 dollars. The ambition and policy of this general, are a sure pledge to me that he will support our plans (which have always been his own) with all his influence, and we may rely on Nicholas, Sebastian, Innes, Murray, Clark, &c. and all, in a word, who are attached to Wilkinson, as well as those who are to compose the army of Clark." The whole of this letter deserves the serious attention of those who wish to form a correct judgment on this point. Mr Power sat out soon after the date of this letter, and after a variety of adventure, the detail of which would be useless on thir occasion, he arrived at Detroit, the head quarters of the American general, during his absence, and was treated by col. Strong, who had the temporary command, with the rigor which the public knowledge of his former errands seemed to merit. Advice of this visit was given to general Wilkinson while on his way to Detroit. Here let a respectable witness, whom we have before heard, speak in his own language. "On our way down to Detroit (says captain Sterret in his letter No. 41) as we entered the river Saint Clair we met a command of men with ditpatches for the General. The same day after having read his letters, he invited me to go on shore with him to shoot pigeons.—While on shore he told me that Mr. Thomas Power had arrived at Detroit in his absence, that colonel Strong the commandant, acting under an order of major general Wayne's, had him in confinement—that he was apprehensive that he would have to send Power out of the country, although he knew him to be an honest clever fellow, a man of talents and one that had rendered him great services, but that unfortunately, Mr. P. was suspected as a spy, and that the United States suspected him, general Wilkinson, and at the same time quoting the old adage, that it was more criminal in some to look over the hedge than in others to steal a hare, asked me, "How I should like to take a trip to New Madrid with Mr. Power?" I answered very well; he then enjoined secrecy on me. We arrived at Detroit before the middle of September, 1797, and found Mr. P. (as the general had stated) in confinement. He was immediately set at liberty and I dined with him a few days after at the general's table. A very short time after this, (perhaps a day) I was sent for by the general who informed me that he had other duty for me, than of escorting Mr. P. that captain Shambourgh was selected for that command, that I must hold myself in readiness to proceed to Kentucky, there to procure money on bills and pay the troops at Fort Knox at Vincennes, which order I obeyed and left Mr. P. at Detroit. In the beginning of November following, I met captain Shumbourgh at Massac on his return from New Madrid, where he had delivered Mr. Power. He shewed me his instructions from the general relative to Mr. P. in which captain S. was ordered not to permit Mr. P. to enter into any of our ports and to deny him the use of pen, ink, pencil or paper, &c. On reading those instructions I expressed great surprise at this precaution when I knew that Mr. Power had travelled through that country on his way, and that he had his full liberty at Detroit. Captain Shaumbourgh laughing said "it was a bore."

Before I refer to the evidence of Mr. Power himself on this occasion, let me advert to one circumstance which must be conclusive. Independent of any light thrown on the subject by Mr. Power himself, it is clear from a document which cannot be suspected, the original instructions from Carondelet, that Power was sent for for the express purpose of making proposals to W. derogatory to his dignity, and inconsistent with his allegiance as a citizen, and his duty as an officer. It is clear from the testimony of Mr. Sterret, and from the general's own letter, that he was well received, that he staid some days, and that he had several conferences with him. It is impossible not to suppose in those conferences, he complied with the instructions given him by his superior, and that he made the proposition which he had undertaken to do.—What would have been the conduct of an honorable man, on receiving such a proposition? Would he not have treated the corruptor and his agent with indignation and contempt, knowing, as he confessed to capt. Sterret, that the suspicions of the president were excited—would he not, if they were groundless, have seized that opportunity of removing them, and by the punishment of the agent and the exposure of the principal have cleansed himself from the foul suspicions under which he labored? But he dared not to do this—he felt himself too much in their power to come to those extremities which were necessary to the establishment of his character—there were too many witnesses of his dishonor—too many letters evincive of his guilt; he therefore, to save appearance, did no more than he meditated before he saw Power—he sent him under feigned restraint to the very place to which he wished to go; and he wrote him a letter which he tho't would impose on the world, but which is, when fully considered, the strongest proof of his duplicity and collusion. The letter acknowledges a first nocturnal interview, at which the return of Power was insisted on by the general; it expresses a perseverance in that determination because Mr. Power approached him, as he says, in a public character, and on national business, which required a speedy answer: that therefore he (Power) was no free agent, so as to elect the time or route of his return, but that he stood bound by motives of political import as well to Spain as to the United States to communicate the object of his mission with all possible promptitude," &c. Is this, I ask, the language of integrity offended by the most humiliating and degrading propositions? Whoever does not see in it the proof of an attempt to cover a deep operation in treachery by the flimsey veil of affected severity, must be insensible to the force of evidence, and will be every day the dupe of knavery.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Bank of Washington on Friday last, Daniel Carrol of Duddington, esq. was chosed President and Samuel Elliot, jun. Cashier of the Bank. Samuel H. Smith was chosen a Director to supply the vacancy occasioned by the election of Mr. Carroll to the presidency.

We understand from an authentic source that a revolution has recently taken place at Algiers, by which the then reigning Dey, (originally a Mohometan priest) was DEPOSED AND PUT TO DEATH.—He was immediately succeeded by one of the favorites of the soldiery, who was placed by the military at the head of the regency without the occurrence of any sanguinary event, except the strangling of his predecessor. This revolution occurred about the 4th of Nov. last. The present Dey is represented as a man of considerable abilities for the station, and the unfortunate man whose place he occupies as having been an imbecile ruler.

Extract of a lettter from a mercantile house of the first respectability in Rotterdam, to their correspondent in Philadelphia, dated 4th July.

"We have now only time to transmit you a translated copy of a decree, whereby the importation of American produce is provisionally allowed for three months under the regulations therein mentioned.—And as our government is evidently inclined to relax, we make no doubt, with the approbation of the French government, but ours will prolong the indulgence, and modify the regulations as far as is necessary, for a free exercise of your neutral commercial rights.

"Tobacco and ashes, are amongst the articles already permitted, by a decree of the 10th of April last."

Decree of the 30th June, 1809.

American vessels arriving within the time of three months from the date hereof (those already arrived included) will not be subjected to the measures of the blockade, provided they have neither been in England nor visited by the enemy; to this effect the captain shall be obliged to make a declaration, which if found false, the ship and cargo shall be confiscated.

So far as the cargo shall consist of goods, the importation of which according to existing measures, is permitted, the same shall be left at the disposal of the owners or consignees, the remainder will be put under sequestration and deposited in the king's warehouses.

Decree of the 30th June, 1809.

ARTICLE 1.

The list of articles permitted to be imported by our decree of the 31st of March last, is provisionally augmented by the following, viz.

1. RICE.
2. STAVES.
3. Peruvian BARK, and other medicinal Drugs.
4. Georgia, Louisiana, and Carolina COTTON.
5. Java Coffee.
6. SUGAR of that country.

ART. 2.

Besides the certificates of origin, required by our above mentioned decree our director of the customs will name a committee of proper persons, consisting of sworn brokers for the special purpose of ascertaining whether the goods specified in the former article are really and originally from our colonies or America, and can be acknowledged as such; for the better execution of which, the goods will be deposited in the king's warehouses.

ART. 3.

One month after the date of this decree, our director of the customs shall make us a report whether it be adviseable to prolong the above mentioned measures.

Origin of the Americans.

The Indian Prophet (or Manitou) who resides near Michagan, told some of the Mississippi Indians who were on a visit to him some time ago, that the Americans were never born, that they grew up as mushrooms, and are the last people on the earth—that the English were born first, the French next, and as to the Americans they were formed by the winds throwing the great waters (or sea) into such a convulsed state as to generate a froth, which the winds scattered among the trees of the forest, and from this froth they leaped into life as numerous as the blades of grass in the Prairie!!!!

The Archduke Charles—From a book entitled, "The life and campaigns of Victor Moreau," we have extracted the following description of the person and manners of the ILLUSTRIOUS CHARLES:—The undaunted bravery, the cool intrepidity, & the amazing skill of this consummate general, superadded to his recent success over the hitherto victorious arms of the scourge of Europe, conspire to excite an interest lively and extensive, in whatever appertains to his character. It is believed, therefore, that even this fragment, small as it is, will in the estimation of the reader, possess a value, and be appreciated accordingly.

[Commercial Advertiser.

EXTRACT.

"The young prince was an illustrious opponent for Moreau at the opening of this campaign. He was conspicuous for his talents, bravery and conduct. He was the idol of his soldiers. He was in great public expectation, and was considered the "rose and expectancy" of the country that gave him birth. He was of a middle stature, well proportioned, but thin: light hair, high forehead, large blue eyes, an aquiline nose, pale lips, round chin, and of a fresh and rosy complexion. His look was pleasing, his manners princely, his deportment majestic."

Fulfilment of Divine Prophecy.

A certain set of men (says the Portsmouth Oracle) save risen up in our country who say that Bonaparte is the minister of heaven, commissioned to chastise the iniquities of the world, and destroy the man of sin and the whore of Babylon. The inferences regularly drawn from their positions are, that as Bonaparte is employed to accomplish the divine purposes, it is warring against heaven, and attempting to defeat the intention of the most high to oppose his power; and that in whatever country he lands his legions, he must be received without a murmur, as a minister of God to restore peace upon the earth. Now, as we do not subscribe to these doctrines, we trust our readers will pardon us while we attempt to prove from divine revelation, and a statement lately made in an European christian publication that instead of being God's vicegerent on earth, Napoleon Bonaparte,* is in fact the beast mentioned in the Revelation of St. John the divine.

"And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy."

The application of this verse to Bonaparte, will be seen by every one who has attended to his origin. Corsica, a little island in the sea was the place of his birth, and it may with propriety be said that he rose up out of the sea, as in many parts of scripture, that word is used when only an island is meant. Whether the "blasphemy" will apply to him, let those who have known the use he has made of every religion to obtain more easily his power, judge. The crowns which were upon the heads of the beast, as mentioned in the revelation, are just the number that Bonaparte has placed upon the heads of his own family. But above all, the following verse points out the very man, as it were, by name who is meant by the beast. "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred, three score and six." To prove that Bonaparte is the person alluded to, we here extract the following statement from the European publication before mentioned, and leave every candid reader to make his own comments upon the fact.

The following are the letters of the Corsican alphabet and the figures which they represent. It will be seen that the figures which represent those letters that form the words Napoleon Bonaparte, added, make 666, the number of the beast.

Domestic Manufactures.

THE subscriber proposes erecting at the Centre Mills, near Alexandria, a Machine for carding Wool, and expects to have it ready to run by the 30th of the present month. It will card the wool and form it into rolls for the spinning wheel, or into batts for hatters, or other purposes. The advantage of having wool prepared by these machines for the purpose of manufacturing into yarn over that which is carded by hand, is generally acknowledged, as being the cheapest and most perfect in its operation. Those persons who may incline to give encouragement to this establishment, may depend on the utmost punctuality as to time and unremitted attention in the execution of the work. The wool when carded into rolls will be packed in such manner as to preserve it in the most perfect state for spinning, and may be transported any reasonable distance without injury. Wool, sent to the carder, must be clean washed, clear of burrs, small sticks or other extraneous matter, and assorted in such manner as may suit the owner; and each quality shall be kept seperate. The expence of carding will be eight cents for that which is made into rolls, and five cents for batts per lb. payable at the time of delivering, or payment will be received in wool of good quality at 40 cents per pound, as may suit the convenience of the owner.
